STREET ASTERCATION-HON. JOHN AMBLER SMITH AND MR. ANDREW WASHBURN MRET .-About 12 o'clock yesterday a street altercation occurred between Hon. John Ambler Smith, member of Congress from this district, and Mr. Andrew Washburn, United States Pension Agent in this city. Mr. Smith was standing in front of the office of Goddin, Warren & Co., on Main between Eleventh and Twelfth streets, and was in conversation with Mr. John M. Goddin, a member of that firm, when Mr. Washburn came down the street. When opposite Mr. Smith he stopped and asked his attention, and said: "You have made false charges against me, and you knew they were false when you made them." Mr. Smith re-"You scoundrel"-and raised plied: his umbrella and struck him across one visited the COSBY INVALID | shoulder. Mr. Washburn returned the blow in like manner, and in doing so broke his umbrella at the bandle. The two then clinched. Mr. Smith caught Mr. Washburn by the throat, and was choking him and pressing him down to the pavement, and the latter was poking the ferule of his umbrella into one of Mr. Smith's eyes, when Mr. Goddin interfered and separated the combatants. Neither was much hurt.

The charges referred to by Mr. Washburn were made by Mr. Smith in the House of Representatives last week while the bill appropriating money for the granite work of the new State Department was under dis-

INTERESTING CASE BEFORE THE CIRCUIT THE TREDEGAR COMPANY.—At an early hour not propose to speak of the glories of other on Monday morning, June 30, 1873, a large boiler used in the drying-kiln of the Tredegar Works exploded, killing instantly Samuel H. Saunders, the fireman in charge. The explosion was terrific, and was heard by many persons in the heart of the city, who thought He earnestly argued that education is a

The drying-kiln was a brick house, about southern portion of the blacksmith shop, which is a large brick structure upon the river bank and parallel with it. Two boilers, of seventy-five horse-power each, generated steam for the kiln, and only one of these was in use at the time of the accident. The kiln was entirely demolished, the strong walls having been knocked down, together with the southern wall of the blacksmith shop, the whole presented one confused mass of broken bricks, timbers, slate, &c.

The boiler that exploded, weighing about The boiler that exploded, weighing about young men of Richmond College—to the approached to receive at his hands twenty-five thousand pounds, was forced roung men of Richmond to most their rethrough the partition wall of the blacksmith shop, carrying everything with it in its course, including a five-ton steam bammer, and stopped about fity feet in the shop. One of the heavy anvils, about three hundred pounds, was lifted up by the concussion and thrown some distance into a coalbox. The fire-box of the boiler was found some forty yards up the river bank; the cylinder equally as far in another direction, while another portion was blown into the river.

The body of the fireman, horribly mangled, was found about seventy-five yards from the buildings, in the road, not twenty yards from the river, and fifty yards nearer what was the dry-kiln lay the head and one arm, which had struck against a stone wall and spattered it with brains. The winlows of the car-shop, opposite the blackmith-shop, were broken out by the flying bricks, and it is said a large number were thrown on an island in the river some two hundred vards distant.

Mr. Saunders was about fifty-three years of age, a married man with two children, and resided near the corner of Broad and Second streets. He had been employed as a aborer for some time at the works, but only a short time as fireman before the accident occurred.

The boiler was made in England, and had been in use by the Tredegar Company only about six months. It was purchased from the Buckingham Gold-Mine Company. A suit for damages in the sum of $10,000 has been brought in the Circuit court of Richmond by the administratrix of the deceased against the Tredegar Company, and special jury, composed of the following gentlemen, has been drawn for to-day at 10 o'clock to hear the case: John W. Cringau, E. B. Addison, David N. Walker, John H. Montague, A. P. Fox, Ambrose Carlton, B. M. Parham, William Ira Smith, the services of General Henry A. Wise William S. White, Lewis H. The object of the meeting was to consider the endowment plan for the benefit of the widows and orphans of deceased Pythians. Several plans were submitted and discussed at some length, and finally referred to a special committee of one from each lodge, with instructions to report at the next meeting. The meeting then adjourned to meet on Saturday evening next at the same place.

Cutting Affray.-Between 10 and 11 o'clock yesterday morning a difficulty occurred at the corner of Tenth and Byrd streets between two negroes named Elam Washington and Frank Adams. During the fight Washington cut Adams in the back and arm with a pocket-knife. Officer Seal appearing on the seene of action arrested Washington and carried him to the Second police-station. His case will probably be heard by Justice White this morning.

FALLING OF A HOUSE.-Yesterday morning about 41 o'clock an unoccupied frame dwelling, situated on the New road a short distance from the Almshouse, fell in with a tremendous erash, causing parties living in the neighborhood to rash out of their houses in great fright, but their fears were soon allayed when it was found out what caused the noise. Fortunately, no one was hurt.

The new chapel fulfills the most sanguine expectations of its projectors, and is not only a beautiful audience-room (capable of seating fully eight hundred people, and very admirable in its acoustics), but one of the coolest and most pleasant to be found.

Some Richmond ladies (among them the young ladies of the Richmond Female Institute) had decorated the room with exquisite taste and rare skill.

The evergreens, the globe of beautiful flowers, and the other decorations of the speaker's stand, were most artistically arranged, and produced a very pleasing effect. While the audience were assembling and throughout the evening Kessnich's band (stationed in the vestibule, which is thrown into the chapel by folding doors) discoursed their sweetest strains. The audience was larger and an even more brilliant one than that at Assembly Hall the night before. They are not in the habit here, it seems, of selecting out celebrities to march upon the platform, only seating there those who are to take part in the exercises, but a number of men of mark were scattered through the hall, mingled with the beauty

In the absence of Captain George D Wise, who had been selected for this duty, the Society was very fortunate in securing to present the medals. General Wise brought down the house by his first remark that the Society had made a grand mistake in trusting a bachelor (Captain George D. Wise)-for "bachelors never keep their wood, William G. Ferguson, William A. promises"-and had thus been compelled to fall back on a grandfather. He first presented the medal to the best debater, telling him that it was nothing but scription was more valuable than that of to wear his prize well and proudly, and always wear it as a lover of truth. Turning next to the "best writer," .he spoke of the power of the pen, lamented that the day of writers of pure English has passed, and urged the young men to tread the path that leads to "the well of pure English undefiled." He cited Benjamin Watkins Leigh as the writer of the purest Miss Duvall. English, and John Randolph of Roanoke as the speaker of the purest English, that this country has ever produced. He next, in a very happy strain, presented the "improvement" medal.

General Wise was in one of his happiest moods, and his whole address abounded with flashes of wit, eloquent words, and good hits, which elicited frequent and rupturous applause.

THE VALEDICTORY ADDRESS

was then delivered by Mr. S. F. Taylor, of Henry county, Va. He warmly thanked the audience for their presence and respectful attention-bade adieu to the ladies-and expressed the great gratification felt at the grand success of the College and of the Society during the past session.
